

UNION 101: ARBITRATION

Arbitration is a means for settling labor disputes through a neutral and independent third party instead of relying on the court system or job actions, such as strikes or lock-outs.

Union leaders often secure clauses requiring arbitration into collective bargaining agreements as the final step in the grievance process to resolve disputes relating to the interpretation and implementation of existing contract provisions.

